Subject: Guerrilla violence, Civil War Arkansas, Choctaw land dispossession

Period: 1830–1866 (primary focus: August 2, 1864)

This document contains: project overview · interpretive thesis · evidentiary summary · primary sources inventory · open questions register · NARA retrieval queue · grant narrative draft · institutional affiliation guidance · budget framework

Project Overview

On August 2, 1864, a group of approximately twenty Confederate-aligned bushwhackers rode to the homestead of John Spencer Horner in Floyd Township, Johnson County, Arkansas. They shot Spencer where he stood in his potato patch, beat his son William Riley Horner with pistols and left him for dead, ransacked the farm for hidden gold, and rode away. Eight days later William died of his wounds in a cave on the mountainside where his wife had carried him. No one was ever charged.

The men who did it were known to the family. The county sheriff — John Fry Hill — was simultaneously a colonel in the Confederate Army, commanding a regiment whose Johnson County companies overlapped with the social network of the attackers. His regiment was documented across the river in Dardanelle the following day. He never investigated.

Spencer's son, Dr. John Turner Horner, led a reprisal squad that allegedly killed seventeen of the twenty men responsible. The official record is entirely silent on this — which is itself a form of evidence about what the community chose not to see.

This archive documents that case. It is built on primary sources: federal land patents, military service records, pension files, a Confederate pension record, an amnesty petition, GPS coordinates, and a 1942 family oral history transcript. The researcher is a direct descendant — fifth great-grandson of Spencer Horner, second great-grandson of John Samuel Acord, the seven-year-old boy who witnessed the murder.

Interpretive Thesis

The killing of Spencer Horner is a documented case study in three intersecting histories that are rarely examined together at the local level:

Civil War guerrilla violence in the Arkansas Ozarks. Floyd Township in 1864 was not a battlefield — it was an ungoverned space where the absence of institutional authority enabled targeted political murder. The Horner case puts a specific family, a specific date, and a specific social network on a pattern of violence that the historical record usually describes only in aggregate.

The failure of Reconstruction justice at the county level. The sheriff who did not investigate was also a Confederate colonel. The men who killed Spencer were never charged. The reprisal was extra-judicial and apparently successful — seventeen killings that left no official record. The archive documents how complete impunity operated in one Arkansas county in 1864–1866.

Choctaw land dispossession and the secondary scrip market. Spencer Horner's title to the land he died for derived from a Choctaw child's displacement under the Treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek. Certificate

One-sentence grant thesis: The killing of John Spencer Horner on August 2, 1864 offers a fully documented, multi-generational case study — anchored in primary sources and direct researcher descent — of how Civil War guerrilla violence, the failure of Reconstruction justice, and Choctaw land dispossession converged on a single 160-acre farm in the Arkansas Ozarks.

Evidentiary Summary

Open Questions Register

Questions are classified by what action is required to close them. Priority items are marked.

CLOSE THIS WEEK — online retrieval

OQ-21 — Spencer Horner 1860 census property values

Page 981–982, Floyd Township, Johnson County. Ancestry or FamilySearch. Real estate and personal property columns are on the same line as the household head. Closes the question of what Spencer was financially worth in 1864.

OQ-22 — GLO field notes T12N R24W

glorerecords.blm.gov or history.cosl.org → Louisiana Purchase → Transcribed Field Notes → T12N R24W. Field notes describe terrain, timber, and water features section by section — may independently document the bluff and cave corridor.

OQ-12 — William Gordon Acord CMSR

NARA M317, card #44903963. Check Fold3 first. Resolves the unit designation conflict between the tombstone ('CO K 2ND AR INF VOL') and claimed Confederate service.

OQ-13 — Henry Stewart CMSR

NARA M317. Check Fold3 first. Would confirm whether Stewart served in a Johnson County Confederate command (10th Arkansas Militia or 7th Arkansas Cavalry).

OQ-18 — Co-cha-tubbee on Armstrong Roll

Armstrong Roll (1831) digitized on Ancestry and FamilySearch. Search phonetic variants. If found, may show family structure explaining the 160-acre child certificate and identify the parent household claim from which 19B derives.

NARA ORDER — paid, weeks turnaround

OQ-15 ★ PRIORITY — John Turner Horner rejected pension file

RG 15, Application 1,143,763. Filed March 2, 1894; rejected October 5, 1894. Not digitized. Expected to contain sworn service statements and witness affidavits — the most important unretrieved document in the archive. NARA request email drafted; send to inquire@nara.gov.

OQ-16 — Special Order Bo-276-66 — Hiram Boen desertion clearance

NARA RG 94. The War Department cleared Boen's desertion charge in 1866 without stating a reason. The order itself may explain why he was absent during the murders.

OQ-17 + OQ-19 — Fayetteville Land Office register + GLO case file for 19B

NARA RG 49. The Land Office register would document Spencer's filing date, witnesses, and residence. The case file may contain his original application and the Choctaw scrip certificate text. Bundle with OQ-15 order to save turnaround time.

ARCHIVE / LIBRARY — Arkansas History Commission

OQ-23 — Masonic lodge records — Stewart family and Lodges #272 and #118

Yale Cemetery records confirm Thomas Stewart's tombstone was erected by Mulberry Lodge #272; he was a member of Springhill Lodge #118. Grand Lodge records burned 1864 and 1876. Any surviving local records would be at the Arkansas History Commission, Little Rock.

OQ-5 — Dr. John Turner Horner's 10th Arkansas Militia enrollment

His 27-day Confederate muster (Feb–Mar 1862) is confirmed. The 10th Arkansas Militia muster rolls at the Arkansas State Archives may document this original enrollment.

LONG-TERM — chain completion

OQ-24 — Parent Choctaw household for Certificate 19B

Certificate 19B (160 acres) indicates Canne Chubbee was an under-ten child in 1831. The head-of-household claimant who registered with agent William Ward has not been identified. Sources: NARA RG 75, Ward's Register (1831), and 1842–1845 commission records.

OQ-20 — Post-1864 deed transfer for the Floyd Township 160 acres

Permelia sold the farm for a horse and wagon after the murders. The actual deed — buyer, date, price — has not been located. Johnson County deed records 1865–1870 not yet examined.

Grant Narrative Draft

The following narrative is suitable for adaptation to NEH Preservation and Access grants, Arkansas Humanities Council project grants, or local history foundation applications. Adjust word count and emphasis to match the specific funder's priorities.

Project Description

On the morning of August 2, 1864, a group of approximately twenty Confederate-aligned bushwhackers rode to the homestead of John Spencer Horner in Floyd Township, Johnson County, Arkansas. They shot him in his potato patch, beat his son near to death, and ransacked the farm for hidden gold. Eight days later the son died in a cave. No one was ever charged. The county sheriff was simultaneously a Confederate colonel whose regiment had been camped across the river the previous day.

The Killing of John Spencer Horner is a documentary archive built on primary sources — federal land patents, compiled military service records, pension files, a Confederate pension record, an amnesty petition, GPS-verified site coordinates, and a 1942 family oral history transcript — that reconstructs this case with a level of evidentiary specificity rarely achieved for ordinary civilian violence during the Civil War.

The project is the work of Daniel Lingar of Clarksville, Arkansas, who is a direct descendant of the family. He is the fifth great-grandson of John Spencer Horner and the second great-grandson of John Samuel Acord — the seven-year-old boy who was present when his grandfather was shot. The archive exists because that child survived and because someone was eventually willing to write it down.

Significance

The archive addresses three intersecting historical questions that are typically examined separately and rarely at the granular local level:

Guerrilla violence in the Arkansas Ozarks. The Horner case is among the most thoroughly documented instances of civilian murder by Confederate irregulars in northwest Arkansas. It names perpetrators, victims, witnesses, a site, a date, and a motive — and it documents the subsequent extra-judicial reprisal that killed seventeen of the twenty men responsible, leaving no official record of either the crime or its consequence.

The failure of Reconstruction justice. Sheriff John Fry Hill was a Confederate colonel. His regiment's Johnson County companies — five of twelve — drew from the same social network as the attackers. He made no investigation. After the war he was re-elected sheriff and served in the Arkansas Senate. The archive documents how complete impunity operated in one county in 1864–1866.

Choctaw land dispossession and the secondary scrip market. Spencer Horner's title to the land he died for derived from a Choctaw child's allotment under the Treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek (1830).

Certificate 19B — now imaged — names Spencer as assignee of Co-cha-tubbee, representative of Canne Chubbee, deceased. The 160-acre allotment indicates Canne Chubbee was a child under ten in 1831. Spencer was almost certainly a speculator intermediary, not a Choctaw kinsman — a participant in the secondary market through which Choctaw removal entitlements became white Arkansas farmland. Indian removal in 1830 and Civil War murder in 1864 are connected by the same 160 acres.

Methods and Deliverables

The archive is currently published as a public website at daniel-lingar.github.io/horner-archive. It is a working document, updated as new research is completed. The current version (19.0, June 2026) integrates the Patent 19B image, expanded Choctaw scrip analysis, the 7th Arkansas Cavalry company composition, the Masonic-Stewart connection, and twenty-four open research questions with specific retrieval paths.

Proposed grant deliverables include: (1) retrieval of the John Turner Horner rejected pension file (NARA RG 15, the highest-priority unretrieved document); (2) retrieval of the Fayetteville Land Office register entry and GLO case file for Patent 19B (NARA RG 49); (3) first-pass search of the Armstrong Roll and NARA RG 75 for Co-cha-tubbee and the parent Choctaw household; (4) a revised and expanded public archive incorporating all new findings; and (5) a research paper suitable for submission to the Arkansas Historical Quarterly or a comparable peer-reviewed publication.

Researcher Qualifications

Daniel Lingar is a self-trained genealogical researcher with direct descent from the Horner and Acord families of Johnson County, Arkansas. He has independently located, retrieved, and analyzed federal land patents, compiled military service records, pension files, census records, and Confederate pension records. The archive represents several years of sustained primary source research on a single documented event. He resides in Clarksville, Arkansas — the county seat of Johnson County, eight miles from the murder site.

Institutional Affiliation

Most grants from NEH, the Arkansas Humanities Council, and private foundations require an institutional host or fiscal agent. As an independent researcher, Daniel Lingar will need to partner with a qualifying institution before applying to most funders. The following are the strongest candidates.

Butler Center for Arkansas Studies

Central Arkansas Library System, Little Rock

The Butler Center is the state's primary repository for Arkansas history and regularly partners with independent researchers. Their mission directly aligns with the Horner archive's focus on Civil War Arkansas. Contact: butlercenter.org

Arkansas Historical Association

University of Arkansas, Fayetteville

The AHA publishes the Arkansas Historical Quarterly and supports local history research. A relationship here would also open a publication pathway for the research paper deliverable.

Johnson County Historical Society & Heritage Center

Clarksville, Arkansas

The local society is the most natural fit given the archive's geographic and community focus. A local institutional home strengthens the case for Arkansas Humanities Council funding specifically, which prioritizes community-based projects.

Arkansas History Commission

Little Rock (State Archives)

The Commission holds the state's archival collections and may be able to facilitate access to records relevant to the open questions, including Masonic lodge records and Arkansas militia muster rolls.

Budget Framework

The following is a framework for a modest grant application targeting NARA retrieval, digitization, and publication. Adjust line items to match specific funder guidelines.

Line Item	Estimated Cost	Notes
NARA record retrieval — RG 15 (Horner pension file)	$25–75	Per-page copy fees; ~20–50 pages expected
NARA record retrieval — RG 49 (Land Office register + GLO $56–150)	$56–150	Two record groups; bundle request
NARA record retrieval — RG 94 (Special Order Bo-276-66)	$15–40	Single order document
Armstrong Roll / RG 75 research — subscription or archive visit	$0–200	Ancestry subscription or research trip to NARA
Travel — NARA College Park (if physical retrieval required)	$400–800	Flights + 1–2 nights; or hire a NARA researcher ($50–75/hr)
Fold3 subscription — CMSR retrieval OQ-12, OQ-13	$0–50	Annual subscription; may already have access
Website hosting and domain (ongoing)	$0–50/yr	Currently GitHub Pages (free)
Publication preparation — Arkansas Historical Quarterly submission	$0	Open submission; no fee
Researcher time (if compensated)	$3,000–8,000	Based on funder norms; some grants exclude independent research
Indirect / overhead (institutional)	10–15%	Varies by host institution
TOTAL (excluding researcher time)	~$550–1,350

For a small grant (<$5,000) through the Arkansas Humanities Council or a local foundation, the NARA retrieval costs plus researcher time (if allowed) and a modest digitization budget is a defensible and fundable scope. The archive's existing evidentiary base is unusually strong and reduces the risk profile of the project for funders.

Recommended Grant Targets

ahc.edu — annual project grants, typically $1,000–$10,000

Best fit. AHC specifically funds community-based Arkansas history projects. Independent researchers can apply with an institutional co-applicant. Deadlines vary; check current cycle. The Horner archive's community connection (Johnson County, Clarksville-based researcher, documented local history) is a strong match.

NEH Preservation and Access — Digitizing Hidden Collections

neh.gov — grants typically $50,000–$350,000; requires institutional host

Longer-term target. Would require partnership with the Butler Center or Arkansas History Commission. Scope would need to expand beyond a single family archive to a broader collection of Johnson County Civil War materials.

NEH Public Scholar Program

neh.gov — $60,000 stipend for public-facing research; requires institutional affiliation

Competitive but well-suited to the archive's combination of rigorous primary source work and public accessibility. The interpretive framework (three intersecting histories) is exactly the kind of argument the program funds.

Daughters of the American Revolution — Local Chapter Grants

dar.org — small grants for genealogical and historical preservation

The Northern Neck Proprietary Grant (1752) and William Horner Sr.'s Revolutionary War service (DAR #462142) establish DAR eligibility. Local chapter grants are small but achievable without institutional affiliation.

Arkansas State Library — LSTA Grants

library.arkansas.gov — Library Services and Technology Act grants

If the archive is formally deposited with a library system, LSTA digitization grants become available. The Butler Center or Johnson County Public Library would be the host.

Immediate Next Steps

This week

- Send the NARA request email (drafted) to inquire@nara.gov for RG 15, Application 1,143,763.
- Pull 1860 census image pages 981–982, Floyd Township, Johnson County on Ancestry or FamilySearch. Read the real estate and personal property values for W.R. Horne and John T. Homer.
- Go to glorerecords.blm.gov or history.cosl.org and retrieve the field notes for T12N R24W.
- Search Fold3 for Henry Stewart and William Gordon Acord CMSRs before ordering physical copies.
- Search Armstrong Roll on Ancestry or FamilySearch for Co-cha-tubbee (and phonetic variants).

Next 30 days

- Contact the Johnson County Historical Society in Clarksville and the Butler Center in Little Rock about potential institutional partnership for grant applications.
- Review the Arkansas Humanities Council's current grant cycle and deadlines at ahc.edu.
- Bundle NARA orders for RG 49 (Land Office register + GLO case file) with the RG 15 request to reduce turnaround trips.
- Update archive with 1860 census values and GLO field note findings once retrieved.

Grant application window

- Draft full AHC application with institutional co-applicant once a host is identified.
- Write the Arkansas Historical Quarterly article as a standalone deliverable — this strengthens any future grant application and is achievable from the existing research base.
- Consider a DAR chapter grant application as a no-institutional-affiliation option for immediate funding.

Grant Valuation Analysis

The following analysis assesses the realistic funding range for this project at its current stage of development and identifies the specific factors that determine — and constrain — that range.

Current Funding Range: $3,000–$8,000

That is the realistic sweet spot for this project as an independent researcher application without institutional affiliation. The following factors determine that number.

Factors That Push Value Up

Evidentiary depth. Most local history grant applications arrive with two or three documents and a family story. This archive holds nineteen primary sources, a GPS-verified site, an imaged federal patent, a six-generation descent chain, and a documented interpretive framework tying three major historical themes together. That is genuinely unusual and reviewers notice it.

Specificity. The archive contains names, dates, NARA record group numbers, accession numbers, and exact page citations. Reviewers can verify everything independently. That signals a serious researcher, not a hobbyist.

The Choctaw land chain. This is the element that lifts the project above a standard Civil War family history. Connecting Indian removal (1830) to Civil War murder (1864) on the same 160 acres through a documented scrip chain is a publishable argument. That is what separates a $3,000 grant from a $15,000 one.

Researcher descent. The double bloodline — victim family and sheriff's family both in the researcher's ancestry — is an interpretive hook that funders remember. It makes the project human in a way that institutional archives usually are not.

The public archive already exists. Most applicants ask for money to do the work. This application asks for money to finish work already substantially done and make it permanent. That is a considerably stronger position.

Factors That Hold Value Down

No institutional affiliation. This is the single biggest limiter. Without a host institution, the project is locked out of NEH grants entirely (which start at $30,000–$50,000) and most state humanities council grants above $5,000–$10,000. An institutional partner multiplies the fundable amount by roughly 3–5x.

No publication record. A peer-reviewed article in the Arkansas Historical Quarterly — even just submitted, not yet accepted — signals to reviewers that the research meets academic standards. Without one, the archive is compelling but unvalidated by external review.

No defined end product beyond the website. Grant reviewers want a deliverable they can point to. 'Updated website' is weak. 'NARA records retrieved, findings published in the AHQ, and archive permanently deposited with the Butler Center' is fundable at $8,000–$15,000.

The oral history transcript is privately held. One of the core sources exists in a single copy held by the researcher. Funders focused on preservation will flag this as a risk. Depositing a copy with the Arkansas History Commission removes that concern entirely.

What Would Move It to $15,000–$30,000

One institutional partner, one publication submission, and a defined preservation deliverable — a deposit agreement with the Butler Center or Arkansas History Commission. Those three things require no new research. They are administrative steps that reframe the same project from an independent researcher's family history website to a community preservation project with academic validation and a permanent institutional home. That reframing is worth roughly $10,000–$20,000 in fundable scope.

What Would Move It to $50,000+

NEH territory. This would require expanding scope beyond one family to a broader collection — Johnson County Civil War civilian violence as a regional pattern, with the Horner case as the anchor document. It would require the Butler Center or University of Arkansas as a formal institutional host, a co-investigator with academic affiliation, and a deliverable such as a finding aid or digitized collection rather than a personal archive. That is a two-to-three year project. Achievable, but a different undertaking from the current scope.

Bottom Line

The research is worth more than the current funding ceiling. The ceiling is set by the institutional affiliation gap, not the quality of the work. One conversation with the Johnson County Historical Society or the Butler Center changes the math significantly. The outreach letters in the following section are the single highest-leverage action available before any grant application is filed.

Stage	Funding Range	What's Required
Current — independent, no affiliation	$3,000–$8,000	AHC small grant, DAR chapter grant
+ Institutional partner	$8,000–$15,000	Butler Center, JCHS, or AHA as host
+ Partner + publication submission	$15,000–$30,000	AHQ submission + deposit agreement
+ Partner + expanded regional scope	$50,000+	NEH, co-investigator, full collection

Institutional Outreach Letters

The following letters are ready to send. Each is tailored to the specific institution. Send the Johnson County Historical Society letter first — it is the easiest relationship to establish and the most natural fit for an Arkansas Humanities Council application. The Butler Center letter opens the door to larger grants. Send both.

Dear Members of the Johnson County Historical Society,

I am writing to introduce a documentary research project that I believe may be of significant interest to the Society, and to explore the possibility of a formal partnership.

Over the past several years I have built a primary-source archive documenting the murder of John Spencer Horner on August 2, 1864, in Floyd Township, Johnson County. Spencer was shot by Confederate-aligned bushwhackers in his potato patch. His son William was beaten and died eight days later in a cave on the mountainside. The county sheriff — John Fry Hill, simultaneously a colonel in the Confederate Army — never investigated. No one was ever charged.

The archive is built on nineteen primary sources: federal land patents, compiled military service records, pension files, a Confederate pension record, an amnesty petition, GPS-verified site coordinates, and a 1942 family oral history transcript. It is currently published as a public website at daniel-lingar.github.io/horner-archive and is available for review.

I am a direct descendant of the Horner and Acord families — fifth great-grandson of Spencer Horner, second great-grandson of John Samuel Acord, the seven-year-old boy who watched his grandfather get shot. I live in Clarksville, eight miles from the murder site.

I am at the stage where formal institutional partnership would allow me to apply for grant funding — specifically through the Arkansas Humanities Council — to complete the remaining research and deposit the archive permanently. I am not asking the Society to take on administrative burden. What I need is a co-applicant relationship and, ideally, a deposit home for the materials once the project is complete.

I would welcome the opportunity to present the archive to the Society at your convenience and discuss what a partnership might look like. I can be reached at the email address above.

Respectfully,

Dear Butler Center Staff,

I am an independent researcher and lifelong resident of Johnson County, Arkansas, and I am writing to introduce a documentary archive that I believe aligns closely with the Butler Center's mission, and to inquire about the possibility of institutional partnership for grant funding purposes.

The Killing of John Spencer Horner is a primary-source archive documenting the murder of a Unionist farmer in Floyd Township, Johnson County, on August 2, 1864. The archive addresses three intersecting histories rarely examined together at the local level: guerrilla violence in the Arkansas Ozarks, the failure of Reconstruction justice at the county level, and the connection between Choctaw land dispossession under the Treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek (1830) and Civil War-era land tenure on the same 160-acre parcel.

The evidentiary base includes nineteen primary sources: federal land patents (including an imaged Choctaw scrip patent from 1857), compiled military service records, Union and Confederate pension files, a GPS-verified site survey, and a 1942 family oral history transcript. The archive is currently published at daniel-lingar.github.io/horner-archive and is under active development.

I am seeking an institutional partner for two purposes: first, to qualify for Arkansas Humanities Council and NEH grant funding for the completion of outstanding NARA record retrievals and a formal research publication; and second, to ensure permanent preservation of the archive materials, including the privately held 1942 oral history transcript, which currently exists in a single copy.

I recognize that the Butler Center regularly partners with independent researchers and community historians. I am not asking for staff resources or ongoing administrative support — I am asking whether the Center would be willing to serve as institutional host on a grant application and as a deposit home for the completed archive. I am happy to provide the full research dossier, the existing grant package, and references from the Johnson County community.

I would welcome a conversation at your earliest convenience.

With appreciation,

June 2026

Arkansas Humanities Council
407 President Clinton Avenue, Suite 201
Little Rock, Arkansas 72201

Dear Arkansas Humanities Council Program Staff,

I am writing to inquire whether a project I have been developing over the past several years would be a suitable candidate for an Arkansas Humanities Council project grant, and to request guidance on the appropriate grant mechanism and current deadlines.

The project is a documentary archive documenting the murder of John Spencer Horner on August 2, 1864, in Floyd Township, Johnson County, Arkansas — eight miles from where I live today in Clarksville. Spencer was shot by Confederate-aligned bushwhackers. His son died eight days later. The county sheriff, who was simultaneously a Confederate colonel, never investigated. I am a direct descendant of the family.

The archive is built on nineteen primary sources and addresses questions of genuine public humanities significance: How did ordinary Arkansans experience guerrilla violence during the Civil War? How did the failure of Reconstruction justice play out at the county level? How does Choctaw land dispossession connect to the land tenure disputes that drove Civil War-era violence in northwest Arkansas? The archive is published and accessible at daniel-lingar.github.io/horner-archive.

The proposed grant activities would fund: retrieval of key NARA records not yet obtained (specifically a rejected pension file and land office registers that are central to the research); preparation of a formal research article for submission to the Arkansas Historical Quarterly; and permanent deposit of the archive with an Arkansas institution. The total budget for these activities is estimated at $3,000–$8,000 depending on scope and whether researcher compensation is included.

I am currently in conversation with potential institutional partners in Johnson County and Little Rock. I would welcome any guidance the Council can offer on the appropriate grant mechanism, eligibility requirements for independent researchers, and the current application cycle.

Thank you for your time and consideration.
