The Horner family: land, war, and remembrance

In June 1860, a census enumerator recorded Spencer Horner as a 52-year-old farmer in Mulberry Township, Johnson County, Arkansas. Permelia appears immediately below him, followed by five younger people. The page places a household in view before the war: names, ages, birthplaces, work, and reported property. Four years later, a family account describes Spencer's killing and the shooting of William Riley Horner, identified in the archive's family reconstruction as his son. William's grave marker gives his death as 10 August 1864. These records bring us close to a family's losses, although they preserve different kinds of evidence [S01, S03, S04].

A household before the war

The 1860 population schedule gives Spencer's occupation as farmer and his birthplace as Tennessee. It reports $1,500 in real estate and $1,500 in personal estate. Permelia is on line 2 of dwelling 698, family 699. The schedule does not state relationships: her identification as Spencer's wife comes from the archive's family reconstruction, rather than a relationship column on this page [S01, S04/S07].

Two dates matter. The printed census question asks who lived in the household on 1 June 1860. The page heading says the enumerator recorded it on 20 June 1860. A reference date and the date of recording can differ. Ages and values are information reported through an administrative record, not a complete account of a family's life.

The property columns show reported values, not a list of possessions. They cannot tell us whether the family kept money hidden or what later attackers wanted. Nor does the personal-estate total by itself establish whether Spencer enslaved anyone. That question requires separate investigation, including the 1860 slave schedule and other relevant records; this edition makes no finding about it.

The land record and its Choctaw connection

Three years before that census, a federal patent dated 1 April 1857 named Spencer Horner as an assignee: a recipient through assignment of a prior claim. The document identifies Choctaw Certificate No. 19B, in the name of Canne Chubbee, deceased, and names Co-cha-tubbee as a representative. It describes a total of 160 acres in sections 19, 20, and 22, Township 12 North, Range 24 West, processed through the Fayetteville Land Office [S02].

The patent explicitly connects the certificate to claims under the Treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek and later federal acts. That connection belongs in the history of this land. The Choctaw Nation describes the 1830 treaty in the context of forced removal and provisions for Choctaw people seeking to remain in Mississippi [C1]. Spencer's patent records a later assignment within that claims history. It does not explain how this particular assignment was arranged, what Spencer paid, or what the claim meant to Canne Chubbee's family.

Those are questions about people as well as paperwork. Further research should follow the original claim and its representatives, rather than treating the Choctaw names as incidental to Spencer's title. Assignment of a certificate is not proof that Spencer was Choctaw. It also does not establish a precise modern house site. The four tracts and their later conveyances need to be traced separately.

The family and the reported attack

The later narrative attributed to Eva Horner in 1942 describes Spencer going toward the house, surrendering to approaching men, and being shot. It describes William Riley running away and receiving a head wound [S04]. In that family account, Spencer was killed and William was also a victim of the attack. The complete original manuscript has not yet been authenticated; the archive currently preserves published excerpts and later reconstruction.

A contemporary official record now establishes William Riley's service and death. The 1867 Report of the Adjutant General of Arkansas lists "Horner, William R." as a private in Company K, 2nd Arkansas Infantry (U.S.) — enlisted December 6, 1863, mustered February 19, 1864 — with the remark, in the roster's original wording: "Killed by guerillas in Johnson county, Arkansas, August 10, 1864" [S08]. This is the archive's first primary-source verification of the service-and-death claim. It replaces the superseded edition's differently-punctuated quotation ("reported killed by guerillas 10 August, 1864, Johnson Co., Arkansas"), which that edition ascribed to a specific CMSR card and to a "Muster roll, August 8, 1865" — neither of which has been produced. The roster gives no circumstances beyond those six words; the head-wound account remains later family testimony [S04], and William's duty status on August 10 is not stated.

The same roster corroborates the deaths of two more men of Company K that summer: "Horner, Pleasant" — enlisted March 29, 1864, mustered June 27, 1864 — "Died of fever at Lewisburg, Arkansas, August 4, 1864"; and "Horner, Andrew" — enlisted March 29, 1864, mustered June 27, 1864 — "Died of measles at Lewisburg, Arkansas, July 31, 1864" [S08]. The roster prints no middle initial for Andrew, so his identification as Andrew Jackson Horner is probable but unconfirmed. Pleasant's August 4 date replaces the superseded edition's unsupported "August 12 per military record," for which no record has been produced. These roster entries date three men's deaths; they do not date Spencer's killing, and the August 2 working date remains a working date.

The account also places two young Acord boys, John Samuel and Christopher Columbus, in the family setting. The archive identifies them as Spencer's grandsons through Elizabeth Horner Acord and Francis Marion Acord. It reports that both parents had died earlier in 1864. These relationships and the boys' presence are part of the family reconstruction, awaiting verification against the underlying originals. Christopher's reported age varies, so no exact age is chosen here [S04/S07].

The date 2 August 1864 is a working date, source not located in the materials verified for this edition. William's marker instead records his death on 10 August 1864 [S03]. One possible explanation is that an injury preceded a later death, but these materials do not establish that sequence. Spencer's exact death date also needs separately dated evidence. The two dates must not be made to corroborate one another by assumption.

Remembering the deaths

William's marker attributes the killing to parties known to his family. It preserves a public accusation and a death date. It does not supply the killers' names or tell us whether an investigation, inquest, or prosecution followed. Its installation date and the date and maker of the surviving photograph are unknown [S03].

The 1942-attributed narrative continues beyond the attack. It tells of reprisals associated with Dr. John Turner Horner and reports seventeen of twenty attackers killed. That is a claim made by the family account, not an independently verified casualty total [S04]. The published excerpt states: “One time they left Jess Wilson to hold their horses when they went to fight” [S04]. The surrounding published passage does not identify “they” or specify which fight is meant.

Family memory gives this history its human urgency: people tried to explain loss, identify responsibility and tell later generations what had happened. Examining how those stories were recorded is part of preserving them. The next task is to compare the complete account with dated records, not to fill its gaps with a more dramatic narrative.

A short timeline

Date	Record or reported event	Source / status
1 April 1857	Federal patent to Spencer as assignee, using Choctaw Certificate No. 19B	Examined image [S02]
1 June 1860	Reference date specified on the population schedule	Printed heading [S01]
20 June 1860	Enumeration date written on the Spencer household page	Examined heading [S01]
Earlier in 1864	Deaths of Elizabeth and Francis reported in the archive's family reconstruction	Original supporting records still to be checked [S04/S07]
31 July 1864	Andrew Horner (Co. K, 2nd Ark. Inf.) died of measles at Lewisburg	Official roster [S08]; identity as Andrew Jackson Horner probable, unconfirmed (no middle initial printed)
2 August 1864	Working date for the reported attack	Source not located in verified materials; exact attack and Spencer death dates unresolved
4 August 1864	Pleasant Horner (Co. K, 2nd Ark. Inf.) died of fever at Lewisburg	Official roster [S08]; replaces withdrawn "August 12 per military record"
10 August 1864	William Riley Horner killed by guerrillas in Johnson County	Memorial reading [S03]; official roster: "Killed by guerillas in Johnson county, Arkansas, August 10, 1864" [S08]; does not by itself date the attack
1942, attributed	Recording of the family narrative associated with Eva Horner	Complete original and transmission history unverified [S04]

Who's who

Person	Place in this history	Evidence and status
Spencer Horner	Farmer; patent assignee; victim of a reported wartime killing	Census and patent images establish entries in his name [S01–S02]; account of killing is later family testimony [S04]
Permelia	Appears on census line 2; identified as Spencer's wife in the family reconstruction	Entry examined [S01]; relationship needs separately cited family records [S04/S07]

Person	Place in this history	Evidence and status
William Riley Horner	Identified as Spencer's son; private, Co. K, 2nd Arkansas Infantry (U.S.); killed by guerrillas in Johnson County, 10 August 1864	Official roster: "Killed by guerillas in Johnson county, Arkansas, August 10, 1864" [S08]; family account describes a head wound [S04]; marker gives the same death date and the family's accusation [S03]
Pleasant Horner	Private, Co. K, 2nd Arkansas Infantry (U.S.); died of fever at Lewisburg, 4 August 1864	Official roster [S08]; attribution in family reconstruction to the younger Pleasant (b. ~1845) is inference from enlistment age — the roster gives no age. A 4th Infantry deserter entry under the same name is unresolved; see research register
Andrew Horner	Private, Co. K, 2nd Arkansas Infantry (U.S.); died of measles at Lewisburg, 31 July 1864	Official roster [S08]; probable match for Andrew Jackson Horner — no middle initial printed. A 4th Infantry deserter entry under the same name is unresolved; see research register
Dr. John Turner Horner	Identified as Spencer's son and William's brother; central figure in the later reprisal account	Family reconstruction/testimony [S04/S07]; formal Union enlistment unresolved. The Army's Official Army Register of the Volunteer Force (Part 4) lists no commission for him in any Arkansas infantry organization, including its Resigned list — but the register's front matter never claims that list is comprehensive, and its scope is the roster "as it stood on the day of muster out," so the negative does not prove non-service. The 1st and 2nd Infantry enlisted rosters likewise contain no John Turner Horner [S08]; see research register
Elizabeth Horner Acord	Identified as Spencer's daughter and mother of the Acord boys	Family reconstruction [S04/S07]; supporting vital/family records to be checked
Francis Marion Acord	Identified as Elizabeth's husband and the boys' father	Family reconstruction [S04/S07]; individual records require verification
John Samuel and Christopher Columbus Acord	Identified as young grandsons whose childhood is connected to the attack	Later family account/reconstruction [S04/S07]; Christopher's age disputed

Here, S07 means a research register of leads, not an authenticated original record. The table makes the family account understandable without presenting every relationship as independently proved.

Questions the archive is pursuing

Which dated records can establish the attack and Spencer's death? What do complete military, pension and court records say about the people and events? Can the original family manuscript be located, dated and compared with later retellings? What became of the Choctaw claim and of each tract after the patent? What records establish the children's family relationships and later lives?

Location research is also reopened: historical tracts, reported coordinates and present parcels have not been reconciled. Location mapping remains withdrawn; this edition supplies no directions or permission to enter land. Details of official appointments, service-record leads and disputed identities belong in the research register.

S01: census image and cautious transcription. S02: federal patent associated with Choctaw Certificate No. 19B. S03: William Riley marker photograph. S04: family-account excerpts attributed to 1942. S05–S06: additional pension-ledger and survey sources. S07: earlier military and pension summaries — reclassified as leads; the quoted CMSR/muster-roll attributions are withdrawn pending record retrieval. S08: 1867 Adjutant General's roster — 2nd Arkansas Infantry, Co. K (pp. 230–231) and 4th Arkansas partial roster (p. 234); the archive's first official primary source for the three men's service and deaths. The annotated catalog gives provenance, uses and limits for each.

The patent's certificate number is visible; its original BLM/GLO accession and catalog fields still need independent checking. The census's original series, roll and provider image ID also remain unreconciled. These identification tasks are recorded with the sources rather than treated as settled citations.

Daniel Bret Lingar assembled this archive to investigate the family's history. Source numbers identify the records or attributed accounts behind each part. The correction register records withdrawn claims and changes to earlier editions; the research register records what remains unresolved. The errata of 19 October 2026 records corrections established by the 1867 Adjutant General's roster recovery. Source limits that affect the meaning of an event or identification remain beside that claim in the narrative.
